National Environmental Research Centers and Associated Laboratories

Under the direction of the Assistant Administrator for Research and Monitoring, the four NERCs are responsible for the management of the Agency's programs in research, development, and monitoring at their respective centers. They supervise and coordinate a number of satellite laboratories, pilot plants, and field stations that conduct more limited and specific research programs. Although each Center performs a varied research program, the Cincinnati Center gives particular emphasis to pollution control methods; the North Carolina Center to health effects of environmental stresses; the Corvallis Center to the ecological effects of environmental pollution and control; and the Las Vegas Center to environmental monitoring.
